

UJMA 2000/2001 14-15

An aerial photograph showing a village in the Swiss Alps. A large, light-colored, irregularly shaped area of sediment or ash covers a significant portion of the landscape, extending from the top left towards the center. The village, with its cluster of houses and a church, is situated to the right of this area. The surrounding terrain includes green fields, dark evergreen forests, and a winding road. The image captures the impact of a volcanic eruption on a rural community.